"INTRIGUE IN HAWAII" (A PENNY GRAVES WAR STORY)

By: JOHN MESSMANN

THE BUILDINGS of the Officers Candidate School of the WAC stood in a semi-circle around a lawn of green grass. Penny reclined leisurely on the and looked at the majestic blue of the Hawaiian sky beyond the roofs of the school buildings. A tall privet hedge grew near her and she lay half in its shadows. She let her thoughts wander lazily. Only two days more graduation and Sergeant Penny Graves would be replaced by Lieutenant Penny Graves. Now she could look back at the past months of effort and study with a feeling of pride. Sure, it had been tough but lots of fun, too. She long slender arms and stretched luxuriously when she heard voices from the other side of the hedge. A girl was speaking and the tones of her voice held Penny's attention.

"No," the girl was saying in a voice trembling with emotion. "I won't. Not any more. You've been lying to me along. But now I know the truth."

There was something familiar about the voice. Penny could not determine who it was. Then another voice spoke. It was a soft masculine voice that sent a shudder through Penny for it reminded her of the soft rattle of a

"You will continue as before," the voice spoke. "I warn you, do not try to back out now if you know what is best for you."

Penny waited breathlessly for more. But the voices ceased, which prompted her to raise her head and peer over the hedge. There was no one there. She jumped lightly over the hedge and ran around the corner of the Administration building. The path was empty. Something was definitely going on that [illegible] reporting to the School Commander. Major Preston listened to the [illegible] and requested to see General Spaulding. Her request was granted while she [illegible] General to grant her an interview. She finally had [illegible] the General. Perhaps [illegible] had sounded [illegible] than it actually was. Probably the General would [illegible] stop reading mystery stories.

General Spaulding heard Penny's story without interrupting.

"You say the voice was familiar, Sergeant [illegible] Take [illegible] look over the hedge sooner?"

"I was [illegible] hear more of it." Penny replied. "It was [illegible] I know it was really important."

"You did [illegible] girl," continued General Spaulding. "We've been tracking [illegible] valuable and secret methods and [illegible] Your [illegible] secrecy. The [illegible] going [illegible] or secret [illegible] agent [illegible] classmates. [illegible] investigation [illegible] on now for some [illegible] with no [illegible]

Penny could not [illegible] a gasp [illegible] as the General went on. "We [illegible] to break [illegible] Don't [illegible] a word [illegible] we're skyrocket. [illegible] we get [illegible] person we're [illegible] Can [illegible] right through our fingers, can we?

"So," General Spaulding continued, "we've [illegible] great [illegible] keep it a secret so the guilty one doesn't suspect we are aware of what's going on. I must ask [illegible] release [illegible] discussing this with your classmates. Thank you for coming to me with [illegible] story.

PENNY'S footsteps automatically guided her to her room in the grey dormitory building. She paused inside of her classmates and one thought repeated itself over and over inside her. One of these officer candidates, perhaps a girl she spent many hours with, was a traitor. But which one? The question was unanswerable unless—unless she could identify the voice of the girl behind the hedge.

She spent the rest of the afternoon in the room, trying to solve a puzzle but without success. The dinner bell rang, and, though she was not at all hungry she went to the dining room and took her usual place. She made a pretense of eating while she [illegible] knowledge that [illegible] one of the gaily laughing girls was the [illegible] She heard Ruth Harkness sitting beside her [illegible] name and she [illegible]

Penny's eyes darted about the nearby [illegible] for a perceptible reaction [illegible] anyone [illegible] She found a dark-haired girl [illegible] far away looking at her. The other girl [illegible] looked away as Penny's eyes met hers. Why, Dave, Penny thought, can it believe it! Not [illegible] Just

Penny paid much attention to [illegible] food and when she glanced toward the other girl's table she saw Judy's figure leaving the dining room. Penny hastened after the girl but when she reached the hall way it was empty. She ran up the steps to Judy's room, found the door unlocked and the room empty.

Penny turned and started downstairs toward General Spaulding's quarters but she halted. Hold on, she told herself. You're jumping to conclusions. Perhaps Judy is not in. That incident at the dining room may have been pure coincidence.

Penny returned to her room and took wearily upon the bed. She realized how weak her grounds for suspicion and decided to forget it. An interchange of looks between Judy and the Jap officer. That was all. Yet she was certain she had seen a recognition flash between their eyes.

Hang it all. Penny exclaimed aloud when the sharp jangling of the phone at the end of the dormitory demanded her attention.

"Penny? This is Judy Davis." Judy's voice was tense then. Penny gasped. "Listen, I'm in a terrible mouthpiece. You were right about the girl behind the hedge. Don't ask questions, but don't ask questions. Meet me at the other girl's cabin. I'll be there. Come to 7 Pearl Street."

A SUDDEN commotion followed the connection. Penny heard the click of the other phone and she jiggled the receiver.

"Judy, are you there?" she cried. "Answer me!" The connection was dead. Penny slammed down the receiver and left the building. She saw that General Spaulding's office was dark and rushed on. No time to ask for help. No answer to the telephone. Penny told herself. She knew every moment was precious.

She hailed a taxi and when she found herself standing on the corner of Broadway in the business section of the city not far from the waterfront. When she entered the building she saw a small knot of people clustered about the elevator shaft. A policeman stood in the center and she pushed through to him. She felt an icy hand clutch at her heart as she saw the small, lifeless figure crumpled at the bottom of the shaft.

"Suicide, the police-man was saying, as he looked down the shaft. "I report it as the Midtown authorities has a witness who saw the whole thing."

"I know this girl," Penny broke in. "What I saw—"

"Sergeant, was a man, stepping forward. He was a detective, a voice she knew. It was a voice she had heard before. It belonged to the man. He was talking. "Sergeant, as he were giving instructions to a patrolman.

Penny came to, her room as she was about to [illegible] called to her. She [illegible] reach her. She [illegible] to stop.
